"The church today is definitely in need of transformation. Individually and collectively, we Christians are weary of worship as usual," says Wiersbe. The author believes that the transforming experience the Apostle Paul wrote about in Romans 12:2 is "the result of the right kind of personal and corporate worship." He says, "We have tired everything else. Now it is time that we returned to God's way and tried worship." The normal activities of the church are good "only if they are a by-product of spiritual worship." Wiersbe summarizes his goal for the reader and himself: "When we get to the end of this book, it is not important that you and I agree on every jot and tittle. It is important that we both expand our vision of God, deepen our experience of worship, and broaden our love of for God's people and our ministry to those who need Christ."
